THE BLESSINGS OF LITTLE CHILDREN

Bill Clary

Little children, but their very nature, bring much good and happiness wherever they seem to be. A person will come into a room and immediately connect with a child or at least try to. Why is this? I am convinced that a child reciprocates smiles and attention and many adults want to be noticed.

As children begin the maturation process they need to be taught discretion or parents will soon “pay the price.” Just ask your child’s teacher if your child is under five, and see what they say. It can be complimentary or very embarrassing.

Finally little children are honest even to the point of being bluntly honest. They state what they see or what they think and it can be humorous or hurtful. Jesus loved little children and castigated those who tried to keep them from Him.

We are grateful to parents of little children and especially thankful to have so many little children here.
