TWO DIFFERING PERSPECTIVES!

Bill Clary

Two ladies were mending their clothing and chatting as they worked. The ladies had much in common. They both married the same year, they both lived in the same neighborhood and both of their mates were employed at the same business.

The discussion eventually turned to spiritual matters and the first woman began to complain about the preacher as he was boring and long-winded. The elders were not caring, the children were so unruly and noisy and the overall atmosphere for worship was not good. She never looked forward to the times of meeting.

The second lady expressed a 180 degree differing view. She said that the sermons were helpful and found them very interesting. She applauded the elders for showing an involvement in the lives of all who attended and for knowing what needed to be done to keep things moving well. The children, while enthusiastic, could easily be controlled by encouraging them to be more careful. Life was good and she always was excited to be with others at services.

The first kept mending her seat pants while the second mended her knee pants.
